SPECIALIST ADVISES FARM GRAIN STORAGE FOR SURPLUS CORN

How to provide temporary storage for Virginia's bountiful corn crop has been outlined by G. D. Kite, associate agricultural engineer at V. P. I.

Kite said that reports from some sections of the State - mainly from the east - indicate there is more corn than normal storage facilities can handle.

His advice follows:

For temporary cribs, you can use circular enclosures made with snow fencing or welded wire or a few poles stacked log cabin fashion with openings between. Whatever material is used should be inexpensive.

At a floor for the temporary crib, use a good grade of roofing, asphalt or treated craft paper on the ground on a well drained site. Seal all joints in the paper with tar or similar material.

The roof can be of the same material as the floor with a few wooden strips across the top to hold the paper in place. Tar underside of such a roof would rest on the corn stacked inside.

Another type of temporary storage is a circular enclosure made of upright poles and wire fencing covered by a paper roof.

About two and a half cubic feet of storage space are needed for each bushel of ear corn.

Because such temporary storage structures are not rat- proof and cannot be fumigated for weevil control, use all corn out of temporary storage before starting on the supply in permanent cribs.

DAIRY HERDSMEN'S COURSE PLANNED

Practical methods in dairy herd management will be taught and demonstrated at a week-long dairy herdsmen's short course beginning at V. P. I. January 10, C. W. Holdaway, head of the dairy department, announces.

Work will include practice by the students in the various jobs of a herdsman, including feeding, care of new-born calves, selection of cows and heifers, and fitting animals for sale and show.

Registration fee is $2.00. Professor Holdaway said the short course is planned to accomodate about 50 and that registrations are being accepted by the dairy department at V. P. I. in the order received.

Additional information on the course is available from county agents and agricultural instructors.

Play safe—drive carefully.

Ye are the Light of the World . . .

The lives and works of men—from the first hopeful gasp of life until the final, yielding one—shape the way of the world.

The farmer behind his plough, the craftsman at his wheel, the man who is hailed as the leader of men, whose deeds are on the lips of the world, or he who lives unknown or forgotten—each man creates a part of the pattern of things as they are and as they will be.

May it be the prayer of men in all lands that Mankind may live and work in peace with consideration and respect for one another. It was the prayer of the Great Teacher, who in the immortal Sermon on the Mount, spoke these words to Man . . . "Ye are the light of the world."
